

SCHOLARSHIP ANNOUNCEMENT
CALIFORNIA INDIAN LAW ASSOCIATION
2007-2008 ACADEMIC YEAR

The California Indian Law Association, a non-profit organization incorporated under tribal law and devoted to advancing the field of Indian law, the Indian law legal profession, and tribal justice system personnel in California, is offering the Allogan Slagle Scholarship in the amount of $2,000.00. The scholarship is available to American Indian and Native Alaskan law school students, with preference given in the following order to: 1) entering law students who are enrolled or otherwise accepted members of federally recognized or nonrecognized California Indian nations; 2) entering law students who are enrolled members of federally recognized Indian nations outside California but attending law school in California; 3) continuing law students who are enrolled or otherwise accepted members of federally recognized or nonrecognized California Indian nations; 4) continuing law students who are enrolled members of federally recognized Indian nations outside California but attending law school in California; 5) entering or continuing law students of demonstrated Native ancestry who will be or are attending law school in California.

Applicants must be full-time students. The award will be based on scholastic achievement, financial need, and community involvement. Disbursement is made during the first semester and does not automatically renew. Students are eligible to apply on a yearly basis. The deadline for application is October 15, 2007. Interested UCLA law students can obtain an application at the Law School Financial Aid Office, Room 1214.
